Dear Hans and Mary:

Must a note of personal admiration and appreciation of the fine job you've done on chapter XII, "Learning from History." Selecting and constructing the frame in which to exhibit Leonard's portrait of history is the work of skilled craftsmen indeed, and my compliments to both of you.

I've one very small question about the second sentence of page 14: Should the opening words of line 4 be something like as much to be deplored rather than visited as sharply? I'm not quite sure of your intent there.

Again, it's a great chapter, and I've enjoyed reading it.

As you've heard, Hans, George Koether has done a fine review of Age of Inflation. We'll probably be using it in January.

Sincerely,

Paul L. Poirrot
