

How much could you earn if there were no machines in your plant?

YOU KNOW it would be only a pittance. You know you can be paid only out of what you produce, and machines are what make high production possible and so make high wages possible.

Then slowdowns are wrong, aren't they —because they hurt you most. And tax laws are wrong which make impossible the savings out of which new machines are bought. Machines must be kept new and efficient if your earnings are going to stay high.

Attacks on profits and machines are attacks most of all on the worker and his standard of living. That's what makes you wonder if they don't originate in some other country. They don't sound like the American language.
