

"Business Is Entitled to a Fair Profit."

NOT MANY will regard the above as a cliché of socialism simply because it is most likely to be heard from businessmen. But have a look for yourself and see what you think. Ask for a copy of Clichés of Socialism, Number 36, one of seven prepared since the publication last year of our book, Clichés of Socialism.

New clichés now ready for distribution on single sheets, 8½" x 11", are:

- 33 "We can have both guaranteed jobs and freedom of choice."
- 34 "Labor is not a commodity."
- 35 "The problem of production has been solved."
- 36 "Business is entitled to a fair profit."
- 37 "Purchasing power creates jobs."
- 38 "We'd rather have surpluses than shortages."
- 39 "One man's gain is another's loss."

Single copy of any or all of the above may be had for the asking. Quantities, 2¢ per sheet. Use order form.

Clichés of Socialism (Numbers 1 through 32)

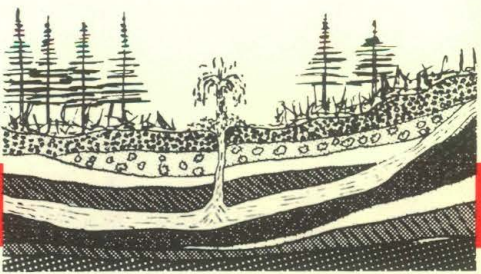

WHILE any of these first thirty-two may be obtained in single sheets at 2¢ each, they are also available in an attractive paperback book (125 pages) at the prices given below, delivered.

One of the best ways to learn the freedom philosophy is to acquire an understanding of socialistic fallacies; at the very least, it is a sound first step. This little book, as popularly received as any piece of literature FEE has produced, might well be made available to friends, students, teachers, clergymen, employees. All of these are easy-to-understand explanations.

Like a Fountain

In view of the fact that FEE makes The Freeman and Notes from FEE available to anyone for nothing more than the asking, the question is immediately raised in the minds of many as to how FEE can possibly finance itself. No doubt you are asked this question. For a correct and brief answer, read "Like a Fountain" inside the flap of the reply envelope.
