Dear Mrs Greaves:

I tried to call but was told you usually aren't in until 10.30 (7.30 my time). I've been up all night doing editorial work, and am anxious to get some sleep, so I fax.

I just read your wonderful piece on Mises in the new Freeman, and remembered inviting you to write something for along those lines for Liberty. (Of course, I understand that your first loyalty is to FEE and The Freeman. But still, I am jealous. It was a terrific piece.)

I write about a rather sadder subject: the passing of Murray Rothbard. I have invited perhaps a dozen people who knew Murray to write brief memorials to him for publication in our next issue. I am embarrassed to admit that somehow the notion of inviting you slipped my mind.

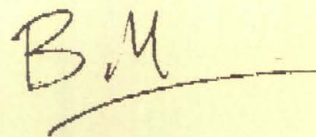

I would very much appreciate your faxing us a few words about Murray, no more than 400 words. We are putting the magazine together tomorrow, so we need it quickly.

We already have memorials from Leonard Liggio, Gary North, Mark Skousen, Bob Anderson, Tom Bethel, Bob Higgs, Steve Cox, Wendy McElroy, Robert Sirico, Bob Hessen, Ron Paul, Sheldon Richman, Jeff Tucker, and me. And I would very much like yours as well.

Of course, I'll understand if you decide against it.

Thanks.

Regards,

R. W. Bradford
