Dear Bettina:

Thank you very much for your letter. And especial thanks for your kindness in sending me a copy of your definitive bibliography of Mises. I have for a long time now been using your 1962 bibliography and am particularly grateful to receive this updated and expanded edition. The work is at once an eloquent testimony both of your own painstaking and devoted bibliographical researches, and of the prodigious scholarly output of our great teacher.

Many thanks also for the reprint of Rothbard's article from the Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences. This good article is one more sign that the profession is at long last beginning to make some amends for its long and tragically cruel neglect of Mises' contributions for so many years. (Thank you also for your other enclosures. When I spoke to you on the phone I had already read most of these pieces. I do not have to tell you that I believe the views expressed in these enclosures to be an almost complete betrayal of the <sup>entire</sup> ~~the~~ libertarian cause. My sole motive in speaking to you was to spare, perhaps, Mises — and those close to him — from a useless and painful confrontation concerning this betrayal.)

Sincerely,

Israel
