Dear Hans:

We heard recently from a young man* who is anxious to earn a graduate degree in economics, but who is unable to take the time to attend courses on a college campus. He looked for a long time for a university that would give a graduate degree by correspondence and finally discovered that the University of South Africa did. He wrote us:

After much investive work, I found that the only university that one could attend by mail was the University of South Africa. (I am sure that there are other accredited universities in this world.) So I joined. Then I found that the University of South Africa promoted ONLY John Maynard Keynes' journals. They never even MENTIONED the Austrian School.

This young man is now living and working in Korea. Percy and I had some correspondence with him several years ago and he seems to have a very sincere interest and quite a good understanding of "Austrian" economics and Mises. So I have now written him in part as follows:

I probably wrote you before about the arrangement Dr. Hans Sennyolz has with the International College, enabling him to give graduate degrees on a tutorial basis. As I no doubt explained, he asks that degree candidates attend his classes at Grove City College for a semester. In view of your persistence, I thought it might be worth your while to write and ask if he would be willing to take you on as a student even though you cannot spend a term on campus. He might be ready to give you reading assignments to do on your own and then let you write a thesis after satisfying himself that you have gained sufficient understanding from your readings. I believe

* maybe he's not so young - I really don't know the International College leaves the requirements for graduate degrees entirely in the hands of the professor.

This fellow's name is Keith Lochard. I am writing you about him in case he should get in touch with you. He seems to be pretty serious. Otherwise I know very little about him. He has never been here and we have never met him personally.

Sincerely,
