Newsweek--Attention Letters Editor:

The death of Charles Edwin Mitchell on December 14, calls to mind the oft quoted "not a cloud in the sky" interview granted by the then president of the National City Bank as he was about to embark for Europe in the late summer of 1929. It is well to remember that this is not the first time that we enjoyed the blessings and thrills of a "New America," such as you describe with so much elation in the December 12 issue, or of showy spending so gleefully reported on page 72 of the issue of December 19. Why must the sanity of a Henry Hazlitt be relegated to the status of a "faint voice crying in the wilderness?"
