Dear Sir:

Thank you for saying, plainly and simply, in Jan. 10 Newsweek, that one of the ways to balance the national budget would be to abandon the $5 billion a year we are throwing away on foreign aid. I keep looking for this, and yours is the first direct comment I have seen.

Now we need an editor who will ~~make~~, and a paper which will print, revelation of the hidden power which compels continued deficit. However, it would not accomplish anything.

Since we began as a nation we have had Divine protection, which has restrained the financial captains from going too far. We still groan under the yoke, which, as some of us believe, Almighty God will lift when the time is ripe.

Meanwhile, men like yourself are doing marvellous work in saying things like, "The budget can be balanced; stop throwing money into foolish operations rat-hole." Respectfully,

James Loder Park
