Henry Hazlitt (1894-1993)—economist, journalist, critic, philosopher—was one of the most brilliant and prolific public intellectuals of our century. It is no wonder that at Hazlitt's 70th birthday party in New York City, Ludwig von Mises called him "the economic conscience of our country and of our nation."

Join the Ludwig von Mises Institute 30 years later as we pay tribute to this great man on the 100th anniversary of his birth. Henry Hazlitt's voice may now be stilled, but his legacy will always be with us, not only in his writing, but in his personal example of courage, decency, and hard work.

Hear some of those who knew and were inspired by Henry Hazlitt. Meet some of the students who are following in his footsteps. And receive a copy of the Institute's new book on Hazlitt. Included are an essay on his life, descriptions of his books, and 5,000 bibliographic entries that reveal seminal yet unsigned articles for the first time.

Join us on the afternoon and evening of November 28, 1994. It will be a time of solemnity and laughter, of learning and inspiration. It would have to be, to do justice to Henry Hazlitt.

The price of the 100th Birthday Tribute to Henry Hazlitt, including the gala dinner and reception, is $100 per person.
